

Cyrille JEANTET

Paris-born jewelry designer Cyrille Jeantet, 52, is an old soul whose passion for precious gems, art, and antiques is embedded in his DNA. Jeantet's grandfather was a rare stone dealer in the late 1800s; his father followed tradition, opening his own precious jewel distributorship in the mid-1930s, and his mother owned an antique store.

"My sisters and I would come home from school for lunch and my parents would have the table covered in loose gemstones and estate pieces—sharing with us their latest acquisitions," Jeantet recalls fondly.

Jeantet started his own design firm, Jeantet Jewels, at age 24. Initially, he worked with such luxury brands as Van Cleef & Arpels and Chopard before creating his own custom collections.

Jeantet relocated to Atherton 14 years ago with his wife, Nathalie de St. Andrieu, to raise their two sons. He finds his artistic inspiration in nature. "I just need to be outside: Open my eyes and ears," says Jeantet, who particularly loves to work with colored diamonds. "For me, working with so many colors and sizes is like creating a painting."

While a few independent jewelers carry his work, including Neil Dahl and Oncina, Jeantet specializes in one-of-a-kind designs. "My customers are sophisticated women, well educated with a strong sense of art and fashion," he notes. "They understand the quality of craftsmanship—and this to me is really what's important."

Jeanne ROSNER

Lunchtime for Jeanne Rosner, MD, is more than just a time to re-nourish after a busy morning. As the creator and host of SOUL (seasonal, organic, unprocessed, local) Food Salon, lunch is the perfect time to share her passion for health, wellness, and nutrition with friends and neighbors. Rosner opens her Woodside home to about 50 (mostly) women for a monthly series of informative talks accompanied by an organic and nutrient-rich lunch.

A medical doctor herself, Rosner often taps into her network of colleagues, convincing them to volunteer their time and their expertise as a presenter. Her topics have ranged from brain food to healing spices to fighting inflammation and the importance of whole grains.

A lifelong practitioner of healthy lifestyle choices, Rosner also acts as a nutrition educator for local schools and nonprofits, including Woodside Elementary School, Menlo School, the Boys and Girls Club of the Peninsula, and Peninsula Bridge School.

This mother of three teenagers recently helped research nearly 80 "unacceptable ingredients" for Revolution Foods, a nationwide school lunch provider. "This project opened my eyes to some of the dangers in our food supply," says Rosner, who is sure to share her findings in an upcoming session.

Regardless of the topic, salon attendees come away inspired to eat right—and they never come away hungry. For more information, visit www.soulfoodsalon.com.

Rúna MAGOWAN

Born in Uganda, Africa, Rúna Magowan has lived a global life. She spent years in Australia, Guam, and Iceland before moving to Maui for her undergraduate education. Next stop: Montreux, Switzerland, for a postgraduate degree in Hotel Management. Magowan ultimately landed in the Bay Area where she spent the first 17 years of her career directing and managing the growth of Classic Kids, a nationally renowned children's photography company.

Recently, Magowan thought it was time for a change. She pondered what she enjoyed most in her career with Classic Kids and decided that it was, "building the infrastructure and growing the company," she recalls. She set her sights on another small local company, Halo Blow Dry Bars, founded by entrepreneur Rosemary Camposano. "I've admired Halo since the first salon opened. I loved the branding, the blowouts, and the stylists. Whether it was Menlo Park, Palo Alto, or Burlingame, I've been a fan." Magowan recently accepted the position of President and General Manager of Halo Blow Dry Bars and will be in charge of new business strategies.

When she's not busy at Halo, Magowan loves spending time with family (including two dogs), playing golf, gardening, and hiking. She has also been involved in numerous volunteer activities and efforts.

And, what's making her summer sizzle at Halo? "Deep conditioning treatments, Keratin treatments, and summer hair care products, which are flying off the shelf." ♦
